

Once upon a time, there was a boy named Vincent. He loved reading fantasy books, especially about dragons and mythical creatures. One day, he fell asleep while reading on a Greyhound bus.

As he slept, Vincent found himself in the magical land of Narnia, where he was surrounded by fire-breathing dragons! With bravery in his heart, he drew his sword and began fighting the fierce beasts.

Vincent battled the dragons for what felt like hours until they finally fled. As he looked around, he realized he was still on the Greyhound bus, but with newfound confidence and strength.

From that day forward, Vincent knew that anything was possible if he only believed in himself. And every time he rode on a Greyhound bus, he dreamed of new adventures in far-off lands, knowing that he would always be ready to face any challenge that came his way.
